

Gossip of London Town

BY THE COUNTERS OF BLANKSHIRE.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)
LONDON, January 11.—A member of the Turf, one of the most exclusive of the London clubs, is understood to be engaged on a volume of reminiscences, which it is not unlikely may excel in interest even the memoirs that Lady Warwick intends to publish. Whether this proves to be the case or not, it is certain that his intimate knowledge of persons well known in society and on the race-course affords him exceptional material for providing the public with a very entertaining book.

Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, has been seen about in town a good deal since her return from America, and her beautiful house in Grosvenor Square has been the scene of several small and more or less informal bridge and dinner parties. She has just left England for the south of France, and proceeds to Biarritz, where she has taken a charming villa for the spring months.

The birth of a son the other day to Lord and Lady Willoughby de Eresby gives a direct heir in the male line to one of the most ancient baronies in the kingdom, bearing date, as it does, to 1315, almost 600 years ago. His history is an interesting one, inheritable as it is in both the male and female line. Although Lord Willoughby de Eresby uses it as a courtesy title, the real holder of the barony is, of course, his father, the Earl of Ancaster, formerly Lord Aveland, whose earldom dates from 1392, and who inherited the Willoughby title from his mother, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby, by right, as well as Lady Aveland by title.

Lord Blythwood has a fine laboratory fitted up at his home in Renfrewshire, and it is said that he is at present engaged in the construction of a new flying machine. Lord Blythwood, who is seventy years of age, was once in the Scotch Guards, served in the Crimean War, and was badly wounded at Inkerman. Three years ago he had an exciting chase after burglars who had broken into his mansion. Springing out of bed, he pursued them along the corridors into the drawing-room, where they were about to break a window. He saw a ladder, and he sprang to it, to view. The thief, however, had been of plate untouched. Apropos of which it is curious to note that one of Lord Blythwood's crests bears the words, "Quae serata secunda"—the things which are locked are safe.

The Duke of Leinster is to be the new master of the horse to the lord lieutenant of Ireland. The "little duke," as he is called, has never been robust, and especially during his boyhood he suffered from long and serious illness. He succeeded to his inheritance as the eighth duke, married and had a son, but the duke's only child, at King Edward's coronation he was one of the six pages who carried the Queen's train.

An interesting story is told concerning the crest of the Leinsters, which shows two monkeys supporting a shield. It is related that the duke's ancestors, and every one was got out of the building except the youthful heir, who was sleeping in one of the top rooms. Just as he was climbing up to the nursery window, the monkey swung itself into the room and shortly reappeared at the window, carrying the child in its arms, which it brought most carefully into safety.

The frantic efforts made by a well-known and extremely opulent peeress to reduce her weight have for a long time formed an amusing topic of discussion in so-called smart sets. Turkish baths, hot and cold packs, the Hamburg and Merlebad have all been tried in vain, and the superfluous adipose tissue obstinately refuses to be dislodged. In despair she has now broken out in a new direction, and publicly announces her adherence to the peculiar tenets of the Christian Scientists. This has, of course, given excuse for a good deal of chatter, more or less humorous. In the direction of wit, however, the palm is easily taken by a newly-made bride of American origin, who, when asked her opinion of the latest mode, murmured archly: "By faith shall ye remove mountains!"

Tragic Man-Hunt.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—A tragic scene has been enacted in the Sainte Avoise quarter. A hotelkeeper in the Rue des Gravilliers received a telephone message from a neighboring wine merchant's shop. The speaker informed him that he was a solicitor, and that he was sending a man round to collect a sum of money. A few moments later the man appeared. The hotelkeeper, who knew of no account against him, believed that the visitor was a professional swindler. He, however, demanded a receipt, and on receiving it declared that he was going to get a policeman instead. As he did not return, the man concluded that his ruse had failed, and was about to escape when the hotelkeeper's wife barred his way. He broke loose and ran away, followed by the hotelkeeper, who shouted "Stop, thief!" Passersby took part in the chase, which became a veritable man-hunt. The fugitive rushed into the Rue Chapon, and a jeweler stood before him. There the man produced a revolver and fired three times at the jeweler, who fell seriously wounded. At this moment a Republican Guard, two soldiers and numerous people, armed with iron bars and pieces of wood, attacked the fugitive, who fell in the street seriously wounded. A shot rang out. While a policeman was attempting to take the revolver from the man the weapon was discharged, the bullet entering the fugitive's right eye. The police had now to struggle with the crowd, who wanted to lynch the runaway. It was only after great difficulty that he could be rescued from the angry and surging mob and taken to the police station.

Adventure With a Lunatic.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—A messenger employed at the Val de Grace police station had a very unpleasant experience the other morning. Some policemen had arrested a mad woman, whose identity could not be established. As nothing could be made out of her incoherent replies to the questions he put to her, M. Carpin, the police magistrate, decided to send her to the special infirmary of the lock-up in charge of a messenger. The messenger and the lunatic entered a cab. When the vehicle reached the Boulevard Saint Michel, the lunatic suddenly smashed the window, and thrusting her body out, shouted, "Help! Murder!" Passersby stopped and surrounded the cab. They believed the woman's story and set upon the unfortunate messenger, notwithstanding his protests. He was belabored with umbrellas and sticks, and even scratched. The poor man was glad to get away. But the angry crowd did not intend that he should escape. He was pursued, and it would doubtless have gone ill with him had not the policemen come to the rescue. The men in blue had no difficulty in convincing the crowd that a mistake had been made, and that the messenger was simply doing his duty in taking the mad woman to the infirmary. The crowd dispersed confused, and the lunatic, having calmed down by this time, was at last taken to her destination.

Burnt Alive by Thieves.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—There has been a brutal murder of a Mme. Mirabel, a woman who lived alone in a wood near Labenne. Her nephew arrived to pay an expected visit and found her door locked. An entrance was effected and the young man found traces of burning in the bedroom. Linen had been burned, also articles of furniture. In a corner were two mattresses. When one was removed, a half-burned leg and then the body of the widow was found. It was clear that the woman had been murdered. The thieves had ransacked the drawers in order to find savings, and having got what they sought, poured petrol on the body and set it ablaze. Mme. Mirabel was not dead when the thieves set her on fire.

Fight Against Stuttering.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

BERLIN, January 11.—The Prussian Ministry of Education has inaugurated a novel department at the University of Berlin—a clinical college where stuttering, stammering, lisping and sniffing, especially among children, are to be treated, and where young doctors are to be instructed in the methods of combating impediments of speech. It is asserted by medical authority that 200,000 German school-children are afflicted with various defects of speech, and are allowed to grow up so afflicted, to the economic injury of the state. It is also stated that 1,000 recruits are annually rejected by the military authorities because of defective mode of speech.

Compulsory English in Germany.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

BERLIN, January 11.—The decision of the Berlin gymnasia, or higher public schools, to make the study of English obligatory during the last three years of the course, has aroused national discussion generally favorable to the new scheme. The project, which coincides with the Kaiser's well-known preference for modern "bread and butter" education, as opposed to classical training, springs largely from the desire of the German educational authorities to equip young Germans better to fight for trade in the markets of the world, whose language is becoming increasingly English.

Union Is Strength.

PARIS, January 11.—The "Anglo-American Press Association" was founded in the Daily Chronicle office in the boulevard last week. Britain and the United States have already accepted membership. The association is exclusive, participation in any similar organization in the French capital being prohibited. It is the first time anything of the sort has been started here and it will no doubt attract the attention of the French government. Meanwhile the bringing together of British and American preachers in a European centre like Paris is an event of considerable importance in the English-speaking world.

When Leon Left Home.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—An engineer named Leon, after spending a joyous evening with gay companions the other night, met with a disagreeable surprise when he returned home about 1 o'clock in the morning. When he knocked at his door he received no response. Then he shouted. Still no reply. It seemed to him that he heard strange noises in the flat. He became uneasy. "If you do not open the door," he called, "I'll break it down." He then tried to break the lock. A key turned in the lock, and the engineer entered. The place was in darkness, and the engineer's wife, who had opened the door, returned to bed. The man began to undress. Suddenly he lost his equilibrium and fell at the foot of the bed. He fell on a crouching body. His discovery caused him to utter hard words. At this moment his wife jumped from the bed and attacked him with a hatchet. Blood streamed from the engineer's face. Thinking that he had stumbled into a den of cut-throats, he escaped. A few hours afterwards he was picked up in the Avenue d'Italie and taken to the Cochin Hospital. His condition is not serious. Meanwhile a police magistrate learned what had occurred, and has ordered the volatile wife to hold herself at his disposal.

"Miracle" in a Church.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—A remarkable story of a miracle comes from Brin, a little village near Nancy. One Sunday, December 28th, the cure was giving the benediction after mass, and as he placed the monstrance on the altar he distinctly saw on the lens the image of a young man such as would represent a saint. Believing that he was a victim of a hallucination, the priest called his precursor and invited him to look and say if he saw anything abnormal. The chanter replied that he saw the image of a young man. The mayor was in the church at the time, and he also saw the image without leaving his seat, which was situated about four yards from the altar. Soon the report got abroad that a miracle had been discovered. Great excitement was caused in the district, and the police magistrate found it necessary to institute an inquiry.

The mystery of the "miracle" has not yet been solved.

Scene in a Church.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—There was a dramatic scene in the Church of St. Louis d'Anton the other day. The Abbe Martin had just finished mass when a priest wearing a long black beard entered the church, accompanied by a man who carried a bundle. The two men proceeded to the altar of the Virgin, and without uttering a word drew from the bundle a priestly garment, which the priest immediately began to don. The beads ran to the altar, but the priest's companion interfered. He declared that he was M. Lhermitte, president of religious association, and that the Abbe Ruel was going to say mass in the chapel. "We are taking possession of the church, as the law gives us right," he added. "We shall see," replied the old beadle. Some old ladies left their praying stools in order to demonstrate against the intruders. However, the association rushed to the police office in the Rue Chaussee d'Anton, and the police-magistrate appeared in the church and expelled the Abbe Ruel and his friend. M. Lepine, the prefect of police, will decide whether any further action will be taken in the matter.

Robbing a Benefactress.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—Mme. Soziska, a charitable Russian lady, will think before she again lends a helping hand to a compatriot in distress. She resides in the Rue des Gardes, and a few days ago encountered a woman whom she had known in Russia, and who declared that she was reduced to poverty's lowest ebb. The heart of kind Mme. Soziska was touched. She took her friend home and gave her food and shelter, and told her that she could stay until better fortune arrived. The benefactress had occasion to leave the house the other morning. In her absence a "friend" ransacked the flat, took 2,000 francs ($300) worth of jewels, and laid hands on all the objects of value and Madame Soziska's clothing. These she packed in a trunk.

When the concierge went to do the day's marketing, the thief called a cab and ordered the driver to take her to the Gare du Nord. By good luck Mme. Soziska returned sooner than she was expected. She told a police magistrate what had occurred, and the thief was arrested just as she was about to enter a train at the Gare du Nord.

The Church and the Press.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—A sign of the times is the singular boldness of all the assumed by the bishops and clergy of France since their emancipation from the Concordat. The word has gone round that every time a newspaper publishes an article reflecting on the person or character of a cure or vicar having charge of souls, there shall be a prosecution before the tribunals. The result up to now has been that the clergy have been very careful to have been most encouraging. But that is not all. Seventeen archbishops and bishops occupying seats in the southwest of France recently met in council for the solemn condemnation of "La Depeche," a most powerful "bleed" organ published at Toulouse. A document was drawn up and signed by all present, and ordered to be read in all the churches two Sundays ago, forbidding the faithful from habitually reading "La Depeche," under pain of "mortal sin." The proprietors of the tribune, however, arrived at an amendment to their opinion, being that they have got a good advertisement.

Nationalization of Coal Mines.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

VIENNA, January 11.—The abnormal conditions of the coal trade are being investigated by a government commission, which is examining the question of production and consumption. This commission will conclude its work in a few days, without, however, having arrived at any practical proposals. Meanwhile the Social Democrats are moving in the matter. They are preparing a bill for the nationalization of the coal mines. The state is to recover control over mineral wealth. Three measures are proposed—first, an amendment to the mining law, giving to the state the right to search for new coal fields and work same; second, a bill authorizing the state to place working coal mines under national exploitation; third, state authority to acquire existing coal mines by public appropriation. The proposed acts will forbid all agreements artificially restricting the output of coal and all syndicates artificially raising prices.

Bloodshed in Court.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

ROME, January 11.—A desperate conflict, accompanied by bloodshed, has occurred in a court at Villa San Giovanni. During the hearing of a slander action a lively altercation took place between Signor Mottarelli, counsel for the civil party, and the representative of the ministry. The latter struck his learned brother. This was a signal for a frightful melee. Each seized a revolver, and shots were fired in quick succession. Afterwards knives were used. Though the bullets did no harm, the blades were more dangerous. When calm was restored it was found that the minister of the persons present were wounded. The floor of the court was stained with blood.

Thrown Down a Ravine.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

PARIS, January 11.—A joiner named Rousset has met with a terrible fate near Saint Etienne. He was returning from a visit to his mother, when he was accosted by three men, one of whom approached, and without saying a word pushed him into a ravine which he had just finished. Rousset fell on the rocks at the bottom of the ravine. He was fatally injured, but managed to drag himself to the house of a friend during the night. He died two hours afterwards from a fractured skull.

The Tokell Tour.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

BERLIN, January 11.—One of the papers here announces that Signor and Signora Toselli (the former Crown Princess of Saxony) propose to start on a lengthy tour in Europe. On January 27th they will give a concert in Hamburg. Afterwards they will go to Warsaw, where Signor Toselli will play at the Philharmonic on February 4th. His fee for his concert being $700. The impresario had insisted that Signora Toselli should play with her husband, but the pianist declined the suggestion. Signora Toselli will accompany her husband inognito.

Umbrellas for Hire.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

BERLIN, January 11.—A new department will be made in regard to the automatic machines in the Berlin stations. Some time this month the machines will distribute umbrellas for the modest sum of 50 cents. The hirers of the umbrellas will also receive a ticket. If these tickets are presented with the umbrella, the hirer will receive the automatic Distributing Company the hirers will receive 40 cents in exchange.

Murder in a Hospital.
(Special Cable to the Central News and The Times-Dispatch.)

BERLIN, January 11.—A singular murder has been committed in the Reichendorfer Hospital, near Berlin. Alexander Fiedler, a patient, had been for a long time entertaining feelings of animosity against Erdmann Lehmann, a fellow-patient. The other day he cut Lehmann's throat with a razor and an iron instrument into the latter's abdomen. Lehmann fell unconscious and died. The murderer was arrested.

RIVAL CLUBS PASS UP SPRING SERIES

St. Louis the Only City Where Local Teams Will Clash.

NEW YORK, January 11.—From present indications there will be only one series of games between American and National League teams next spring. It is certain that the Highlanders and the Giants will not clash, and also a foregone conclusion that the Cubs and the Sox will not meet. To date the only series arranged between the Cardinals and Browns of St. Louis. The two Boston clubs will hardly come together, as George Dokey, owner of the Nationals, purposes to have his team remain in the South until the last possible moment. The Phillies and the Athletics will not meet, the ante-season question of superiority thus resting with the settled in all cities that sport and support two clubs save in St. Louis. The title of local championship means a lot to a club now, as about as spring games no longer attract, as fans have only one desire, that is, to have their representatives win the flag and then capture the world's championship. Club owners figure they will get the money of the enthusiasts at the gate anyhow during the championship season, and that the fans will be glad to hurry home from the training trips to play a series when the weather is likely to be bad, in which event all the benefits acquired on the spring tour will vanish. Logically there is only one place for a spring series on the major league circuits and that is in St. Louis, where the fans will be hungry for ball about the end of March and where the weather is almost certain to be good prior to the opening of the championship season. These gamblers are not alone in their feeling. In fact, a feeling of resentment among certain persons that the American League entered the mound city and a similar feeling among another class of gamblers cannot forgive the National League for not getting out.

Both Teams Stronger.

Here in New York the fans have reached a happy condition caused by the advantageous deals pulled off by Managers McGraw and Griffith, where it is considered both local teams are good and have excellent chances of finishing high up in their respective races in 1908.

The enthusiasts this winter and next spring will settle among themselves the question of superiority between the Highlanders and Giants by consideration of the records of the players of the two teams who are about as interesting and instructive a pastime for the off months as is known. Records of this character, based on the 1907 averages, show the two teams to be most evenly matched. The Giants, with Mathewson and Eversham in the points, would have a club batting average of .293 as against the Highlanders. 261. Chesbro and Kleinow being paired as the Hilltoppers' battery. In fielding the Giants would be seven points better than their adversaries. In slugging, while in stolen bases, and long hitting, the honors would be about even, with the Highlanders having just a wimie the best of it. The records follow:
